HOW A SMALL SIGN INSPIRED A BIG IDEA.

When we were hired to design the branding of the Chicago Athletic Association Hotel, in our first site visit we stumbled on a several year old “STAIRWAY” sign whose pointed uppercase letter A stood up against the mechanic aspect of the rest of the letters. That discrepancy was love at first sight. In a very short numbers of design session we developed a type system for the Hotel’s voice that feels mechanically efficient while being slightly naïve at the same time. NoExit is a no-nonsense typeface with a few quirks to break the monotony of its rigid orthogonal system. It’s an ideal typeface for signage systems or magazine titles or whatever the creativity of the designer pushes it to.

The extended weights and widths family makes it the perfect choice for any design that requires versatility and authority. From magazine titles to street signage this font will support any text that needs strength and straightforwardness. To avoid the typical blend expressiveness of square geometric typefaces, the uppercase A, M, W, V, and Y were drawn with unexpected triangular shapes devised to break the all-orthogonal geometry of the fonts’s texture
